

Memory & Forgetting.

Introduction to psychology- I

Definition of memory –

something remembered from the past.

Memory is today defined in psychology as the faculty of encoding, storing, and retrieving information (Squire, 2009).

Memory refers to the brain's ability to store, retain, and recall information. It involves the encoding, storage, and retrieval of experiences, knowledge, and skills. Memory is a crucial aspect of cognition, contributing to learning, decision-making, and overall cognitive functioning. It can be categorized into short-term and long-term memory, each serving different purposes in information processing.

Three system of memory –

In psychology, memory is often conceptualized as consisting of three main systems:

- Sensory Memory: Sensory memory is a mental representation of how environmental events look, sound, feel, smell and taste.

During every moment of an organism's life, sensory information is being taken in by sensory receptors and processed by the nervous system. Sensory information is stored in sensory memory just long enough to be transferred to short-term memory.

This system briefly holds sensory information from the environment, such as visual or auditory stimuli. It has a short duration and a large capacity but only retains a representation of the sensory input.
