

Developing your sketches

ADDING SIMPLE DETAILS

Once you are happy with the proportions of your basic sketches, you can begin to round off the shapes and create a more natural-looking outline. At the same time, add in a few details such as eyes, nose, whiskers, and the beginning of the whiskers, as in the tiger example below. The sketch will now be ready to transfer on to whatever support you are going to use.

The structural sketch retains the suggestion of the pose lines, but the geometrical shapes (see previous page) are developed into more realistic muscle and fur textures that will be useful for the next stage.

This picture shows the geometrical shapes developed on top of the structural pencil sketch opposite. Note how the fur texture is built up.

Transfer
The sketch was transferred on to black drawing paper, using white transfer paper. It then used coloured pencils to develop the tiger, which might serve as a base and colour sketch for a more complete painting at some point.
