

Design Process 2 Urban studies

Johnson's practice follows a series of "iterational" and cultural references which guide the subsequent form taking of his linear language. This is most clearly apparent in the master plans and the urban-scale studies. The ideas, metaphors and conceptual references translate into a distribution of signs that give shape to new urban structures.

In the context of a "site as device" from the various fragments of the history of Providence Place, recorded from such collage pieces into a collective conceptual organization that justify every programmatic connection, the master plan for Grand Parc keeps alive the memory of the Queen in its address as the gateway of Providence in the historic map of 1804, in the Declaration of Independence, and in the legacy of John Winthrop. While the first urban drawings depict the urban network in which the lines take form, it is the complexity of a multi-scaled inquiry, in which plans are created from various references which always build the "form" of the space.
