Econometric Modeling in Economic Education Research William E. Becker Jr., Rolf A. Walstad, 2012-12-06 Since its establishment in the 1950s the American Economic Association's Committee on Economic Education has sought to promote improved instruction in economics and to facilitate this objective by stimulating research on the teaching of economics These efforts are most apparent in the sessions on economic education that the Committee organizes at the Association's annual meetings At these sessions economists interested in economic education have opportunities to present new ideas on teaching and research and also to report the findings of their research The record of this activity can be found in the Proceedings of the American Economic Review The Committee on Economic Education and its members have been actively involved in a variety of other projects In the early 1960s it organized the National Task Force on Economic Education that spurred the development of economics teaching at the precollege level This in turn led to the development of a standardized research instrument a high school test of economic understanding This was followed later in the 1960s by the preparation of a similar test of understanding college economics The development of these two instruments greatly facilitated research on the impact of economics instruction opened the way for application of increasingly sophisticated statistical methods in measuring the impact of economic education and initiated a steady stream of research papers on a subject that previously had not been explored

Resources in Education ,1986 The Myth of the Free Market Mark Anthony Martinez,2009 Explains how the 2008 financial meltdown came about and how to revitalize global and domestic economies Shows how capitalist economies developed and why the state matters in their functioning Free market purists claim that the state is an inefficient institution that does little for society beyond providing stability and protection The activities related to distributing resources and economic growth they say are better left to the invisible hand of the marketplace These notions now seem tragically misguided in the wake of the 2008 market collapse and bailout Mark Martinez describes how the flawed myth of the invisible hand distorted our understanding of how modern capitalist markets developed and actually work Martinez draws from history to illustrate that political processes and the state are not only instrumental in making capitalist markets work but that there would be no capitalist markets or wealth creation without state intervention He brings his story up to the present day to show how the seeds of an unprecedented government intervention in the financial markets were sown in past actions The Myth of the Free Market is a fascinating and accessible introduction to comparative economic systems as well as an incisive refutation of the standard mantras of neoclassical free market economic theory

The Effect of Principles Courses on Students' Attitude Toward Economic Literacy Behrooz Sedaie,2005 This paper investigates the determinants of students attitude toward economic literacy Because the majority of students take principles courses as required rather than as elective the question of interest is what may cause students who finish economics principles course to believe that a basic economic literacy is necessary for everyone to possess Based on prior research findings a simultaneous equations probit model is built and estimated using data collected from students completing principles courses at the University of Minnesota Crookston It is found that students who would use their economic knowledge in their decisions and in their voting have a higher probability of believing that a basic economic knowledge is necessary for everyone to possess Also being female and achievement in understanding economics positively affects this probability

Localizing Knowledge in a Globalizing World Ali Mirsepassi,Amrita Basu,Frederick Weaver,2003 The essays in this collection address the current crisis in area studies a crisis that differs from its perennial struggle with the established academic disciplines This crisis stems from the confluence of three related circumstances the end of the Cold War greater economic and cultural fluidity across political borders and contradictory intellectual trends in the academy which include on the one hand a renaissance of universalizing thinking in the social sciences and on the other hand the rise of post colonial studies and debates about modernity postmodernity and cultural hybridization Although the essays differ markedly in their focus and strategies the authors all demonstrate that local knowledge including serious study of individual cultures and proficiency in foreign languages which are vital to understanding rapidly changing global patterns and to countering universal claims by the social sciences While the authors also agree that area studies must reject their ethnocentric heritages and adopt inventive new contours they
