Schultz,1997 This is a study of the applicability of prospect theory to military decision making Prospect theory posits that the decision maker s reference point determines the domain in which he makes a decision If the domain is one of losses the decision maker will tend to be risk seeking if gains then he will be risk averse The author proposes that if prospect theory s propositions are correct then it may be possible for the decision maker by assessing his own domain to make better informed decisions One implication of this study is that if he can do the same for a subordinate or for an enemy he may be better able to predict their responses in a given situation The project s goal is to develop a framework for assessing risk propensity It does this by first describing the military decision making process and concluding that it is a rational decision making process Next the paper describes prospect theory and matches the key aspects of the theory with the military decision making process Next it proposes a framework for assessing risk propensity The theory is tested in a case study of General Dwight D Eisenhower s 1944 decision to launch Operation Market Garden This decision is analyzed in terms of Graham Allison s three models for decision making and prospect theory to determine which model or theory seems to provide the best explanations for Eisenhower s decision The last chapter applies the risk propensity framework to the case study to test if it can predict risk propensity and its impact on decision making The author concludes that prospect theory s propositions are valid and that this theory provides a prescriptive way to consider decision making under risk Although prospect theory does not predict the choice a decision maker will select it should reveal his bias toward a risky or over cautious solution Toward a New Taxonomic Framework for Central California Archaeology James Allan Bennyhoff,David Allen Fredrickson,1994 Dynamic Semi-Markov Framework for the Analysis of Consumer Response Kenneth Joseph Wisniewski,1981 American Carbonator and American Bottler ,1908 H.O.
