Psychology of SELF-LEAD in Organizations

The first comment about self-lead is that it is not a simple matter of following a set of rules or procedures. It is a complex process that involves a deep understanding of the organization's culture, values, and goals. It is a process that requires a high level of self-awareness and a willingness to take responsibility for one's actions. It is a process that is not linear and that can be challenging and frustrating at times. However, it is a process that is worth the effort and that can lead to significant improvements in an organization's performance.

Second, the nature of the work itself is a critical factor in determining whether self-lead is a viable option for an organization. Some organizations have a high degree of autonomy and a flat hierarchy, which makes it easier for employees to take initiative and lead. Other organizations have a more traditional hierarchy and a high degree of control, which makes it more difficult for employees to lead. It is important to consider the nature of the work and the organization's structure when evaluating the potential for self-lead.
